In slang as in dress, fashion constantly strives to achieve the utterly inane. Impartial observers cheerfully concede the attainment of a considerable degree of success in that direction. Nobody knows when a new individual of slang arrives "in our midst." If they came with warning and notice, the great majority of them would be shooed off like a smallpox patient, by the common sense of the majority. But they come insidiously and before we know they are here they are entrenched, says the New Haven Register. So came—when or how no one can say—one of the latest and the silliest—"believe me." The thing is not striking and in itself is not new. Some have not recognized it as slang. But closely observed in its present usage it plainly is meant for that. The user of it interjects into mediocre conversation, props up statements which have only a nominal force with the pitiful, pointless appeal to "believe me." It seems to imply that the speaker knows he is lying and wishes to forestall incredulity, but it really doesn't mean that. In fact, it doesn't mean anything except that another footless imitator has caught at another straw borne on the wind of senseless custom, and saddled it on the speech of the day. An the multitude of sheep are tumbling over themselves to follow the form, tickled half to death in the notion that they are achieving the latest thing in language up to the minute.

The German word "Kur" does not mean "cure," although it is not an uncommon thing to find it so translated into English. "To cure" in English means "to restore to health; to effect a cure;" but in other languages it means merely to apply "a method of remedial treatment of disease; medical or hygienic care; method of medical treatment." The German word for "restoration to health" is "Heilung," not "Kur." The Latin word "cura" means merely "care," a shade of meaning which is preserved in the derived term "curator." An Italian physician was recently made to say, when his article was translated into English, "I cured ten typhoid patients last month and six of them died." What he really said was that he had treated ten patients.

Old time Germans ate some strange dishes. Thus, for instance, the courtier chronicler of Charles V.: "I will tell you no lie," declared Don Anthony, of Guevara. "I saw such kinds of meat eaten as a roasted horse, a cat in jelly, little lizards in hot broth, frogs fried and divers sorts of meats, which I never knew what they were till they were eaten. And, for God's sake, what is he that shall read my writing and see what is commonly eaten at feasts that it will not in a manner break his heart."

An educator has died in Philadelphia who for seventy-one years was a teacher. That he was a good teacher, his length of service testifies past dispute. The continuing value of a life so spent in influencing others for food is incalculable in its benefits to humanity, and this one holds a record which few will surpass in times to come.

The time when the vacuum cleaner will be used on trains to get the dust out of the traveler's clothes seems to be near at hand. Like its predecessor, the whisk broom, the machine will not be considered a success by the porter who operates it unless it gets a piece of change out of the traveler's pocket.

A New Orleans physician announces that he has discovered a simple alkaline solution which is a permanent cure for pellagra. If he makes good his claim his name will have a high place on the roll of fame.

An argument against dancing promoted by a "moralist," is that some persons seem to swell, especially on objectionable part of it. That makes it plain that the remedy is to exclude the objectionable parts.

The people of Mars have been doing more signaling to us, according to one astronomical expert. They may be trying to arrange for an aeroplane route between the two planets at space rates.

A WOMAN'S MIND.

The old saying, "Convince a man against his will and he's of the same opinion still," would seem to apply more especially to women, says the Boston Globe. If we may trust the accuracy of a dispatch from Pittsburgh, giving a report of a talk by Prof. Munsterberg before the students of Carnegie Institute of Technology. In describing an experiment with a group of Harvard men and a group of Radcliffe women, who were asked to tell which of two blackboards contained the more white spots, Prof. Munsterberg is reported to have said that 51 per cent. of the men and 49 per cent. of the women named the right board, but after the matter had been discussed by the class, each side attempting to convince the other of its correctness, a second vote showed that 78 per cent. of the men and only 48 per cent. of the women made the right decision. Commenting on the experiment, the psychologist is said to have declared that women form their opinions and judgments as rapidly and as accurately as men, "but when they have an opinion they stick to it, and no amount of discussion can change it."

Some American editors have just learned that in France and Germany recruits for the army who come from some rural districts are inferior in stature and stamina to the young men bred in cities. The result of this new knowledge is an amusing set of speculations as to the way modern science is making the city the best place in which to rear children. The real explanation is very different. Defective rural recruits come from sterile regions known to ethnologists as "misery spots," where conditions of life are so hard as to stunt growth and impair health. Such a "misery spot" in France is found in the Limousin hills, not very far from Limoges. A little district in those hills has one of the shortest populations in Europe. Recruits from this place are bound to make a bad showing when compared with those of Paris, whose population is drawn from all France, and, therefore, represents the average of all France. Modern science has done much to make city life healthier than before; but it has not yet enabled cities to breed a race of men taller and sounder than those of well-to-do country districts.

One of the many centennials and semi-centennials that are celebrated is that of the centennial of the birth of Giuseppe Verdi, the composer of many of the most charming operas ever produced, and whose production made the fame of many songsters. The actual date of his birth in 1813 is not given without a doubt in the biographies, but no matter what the date, his "Il Trovatore," "La Traviata," "Rigoletto," and, less known in America, strange as it may seem, his "Othello" and "Falstaff," know no date and no ending.

It is alleged that when you get milk that tastes of the Jimson weed, you may be sure that it is pure. That is a non sequitur, since the cow may absorb typhoid or tuberculosis germs as well in combination with the weed, as with alfalfa or cow peas. Anyhow, most people will prefer milk that does not taste of physic, even if the repellent mess is aseptic.

The New York hotel proprietor who advised his out-of-town guests not to expect busy New Yorkers to waste time on mere politeness had the wrong idea. It is one thing for a city to have a rude population, but quite another to advertise the fact publicly as an attraction for visitors.

Ladies who object to having algrettes forcibly removed from their hats on entering this country have two ways of avoiding the experience. One is to wear no algrettes at all. The other is to wear the imitation kind. With such liberty of action all trouble should prove avoidable.

A German professor has discovered a method of dyeing trees permanently in twenty-four hours. This discounts nature's justly celebrated autumn coloring in the permanency and speed of turning the leaves and the trick simultaneously and manufacturing landscapes to order.

The dressmaking art will not have reached its highest degree of perfection until a woman can change her gown as quickly as she changes her mind.

Professor Munsterberg says women do not change their minds. Evidently the professor never saw the exchange desk of a drygoods store.

Score another for the movies. Picture shows are being installed on the German warships.

TOLL OF THE RABBIT.

Since the hunting season opened, November 15, the church bell has tolled the funeral knell daily of one or more victims of accidental shooting in Ohio. The rabbit gets a silent and grim revenge against man who pursueth it. Quail are enjoying a reprieve this year.

The rabbit is the hunter's prize. Every big daily newspaper records the old story of the gun being discharged with a human being in front of it. Almost every county has reported one or more of these unfortunate events. Man is slow to learn his lessons.

Accidents will happen, but the best regulated families keep Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil for such emergencies. Two sizes, 25c and 50c at all stores.

I want to compliment the Santa Claus club for their efforts to give the unfortunate children a "Merry Christmas," said Oliver Goodman as he pushed his Journal subscription ahead another year. Oliver had just come from the bank where he had dropped some silver coins in the Santa Claus box, which proves that many unassuming people have very tender hearts and are ready to lend a helping hand in the cause of the unfortunate.

Mrs. Caroline E. Walters, Sixth and Cherry Streets, Perrysburg, Ohio, says: "I had sharp pains in my back and shoulders and when the attacks came on, I could hardly get up from a chair. I suffered from dizzy spells and headaches and I was miserable in every way. Hearing that Doan's Kidney Pills were good for such troubles, I tried them and they gave me prompt relief. After using this remedy, I felt like a different person, being able to sleep and eat well and having no pains or aches. The cure has lasted and I am so grateful that I don't hesitate one minute in confirming the endorsement I have previously given Doan's Kidney Pills."
